

VFR1200

A quick trip down to LA meant a quick purchase of a new vehicle to celebrate a shared milestone with my partner. Alas, my good luck driving a bargain was offset by a moment of unusual careless. As I was rushing through LAX carrying three bags, I left a tiny bag in a restaurant with all my ID, $500 that I successfully haggled down, and 6 bags of Cadbury eggs from Westside Collector Car Storage. The money! The eggs! The bagel from in-room dining at the InterContinental earlier that morning!

To this day, I still mourn the loss of my Cadbury eggs.

INDY 500

My first endurance race started at the Indy 500 spectator stands on an unusually cold and rainy day, which meant we were blessed with the presence of blow-drying trucks. This was a rather unusual race to watch, with wave after wave of chaos: uncountable crashes after each start, 3 crewmen hit during a pitstop, pit road fires! I was rooting for Takuma Sato to win after leading the race for 51 laps as I was fortunate to hear him speak at NSXPO 2024, but a poorly executed pit stop ruined those chances. What are the chances of ever witnessing another mayhem-filled race as this?